Actualités juridiques / Legal news

- The new developments regarding questions related directly or indirectly with religious affairs in Greece from November 2014 until April 2015 are the following:

a) Encyclical 12773/Δ2-23/01/2015 issued by the Ministry of Education and Cults defines that the non-Orthodox Christians or atheist pupils in primary and secondary schools will be exempted from religious course, on the condition that the parents sign the relevant consent form. The encyclical also stipulates that the headmasters will have the responsibility to control the validity of the evidence presented to substantiate the application for exemption.

Various voices were raised against the application of the new encyclical on the grounds that it makes the exemption procedure more difficult by defining stricter criteria and technical impediments. In comparison to the previous encyclical 133099/Γ2/19-9-2013, which stipulated as sole criterion a parental statement merely requesting the pupil's exemption on the ground of her/his freedom of conscience, the new framework was viewed as a retrogression. It was even suggested that its practical application might lead even to the violation of the religious freedom value frame. This is because the parents are more or less requested to prove to the head of the school that they are not Orthodox Christians in order to have their child exempted. This has a two-fold effect. First, a third person, i.e. the school's head, acquires the power to intervene in an absolutely personal matter. Second, the parents' right not to reveal their personal religious or non-religious affiliation is violated. On the other hand, it should be noted that the ruling 115/2012 of the Administrative Court of Appeal of the city of Chania (Crete) stipulated that: 'explaining why the pupil refuses to attend the religious class does not constitute a violation of art. 13 of the Constitution' (i.e. protection of religious freedom).

It is interesting also to note that the new encyclical was promulgated on the very last day of office of the previous Government before the January 2015 elections. The new Governmental officials have declared their will to withdraw the new encyclical. On the other hand, the fact that the second party (ANEL) of the actual coalition government has a pro-religious stance and that the traditional/religious value frame is a primary element of its agenda may complicate things in this respect.

- Encyclical 133099/Γ2/19-9-2013
- The Protest of the Atheist Union of Greece

b) The new Prime-Minister Alexis Tsipras and the Cabinet members coming from the Leftist party Syriza did take the civil Oath of Office, instead of the customary religious one, at the ceremony before the President of the Greek Republic. This decision has a strong symbolic significance, since it happened for the first time in Greek modern history. The Orthodox Church of Greece did not raise any protest against this decision. In this regard, it is interesting to note that Archbishop Hieronymus was actually the very first official with whom A. Tsipras met right after his election to office.

c) The Syriza party, despite its pro-secular discourse, seems to be reluctant to put the issue of Church-State separation or other controversial questions of religious interest on the table. Judging from the various statements of its officials as well as the close cooperation with the Church to counteract the current humanitarian crisis, this question does not seem at present to be included on the Administration's agenda.

Actualités juridiques / Legal news

- Le 6 avril 2015, le Président Vladimir Poutine a signé la loi fédérale n° 80-FZ introduisant des modifications dans le domaine du droit des religions, afin de réviser les spécificités du statut juridique des organisations religieuses dans le nouveau Code civil (automne 2014, voir Eurel newsletter n° 20, novembre 2014).

La nouvelle loi autorise les organisations religieuses à définir elles-mêmes dans leurs statuts et règlements intérieurs la participation de leurs fondateurs et membres aux organes de gestion de l'organisation.

La nouvelle loi a abrogé l'obligation d'avoir le capital statuaire pour les organisations religieuses prévoyant dans leurs statuts des activités lucratives (commerciales). Elle a également instauré que l'article 53.1 du Code civil sur la responsabilité personnelle des représentants plénipotentiaires, des membres des organes collectifs et des dirigeants de fait ne s'applique pas aux organisations religieuses.

La loi instaure aussi la primauté des dispositions spécifiques de la loi « Sur la liberté de la conscience et sur les associations religieuses » relatives au statut juridique des organisations religieuses sur les celles du Code civil.
